PAST TRIPS

Waiopahu – The mutineers point of view.

13-14th SEPTEMBER WAIOPEHU

There were six of us to start with, all with one destination in mind – Waiopahu Hut. The only difference was that three of us had a different route in mind. We had never been to south Ohau Hut and so decided that this was a good time to see it.

When we got to Ohau Hut, we let our point of view be known. Saying our goodbyes to Trevor, Steven and Eric we headed off up the Ohau. Cooling off as we paddled up the river, one of the party managing to sit down in the river at least once, we soon arrived at South Ohau Hut to be greeted by a crowd who were in for a week. As we sat down for a quick early lunch they tried to disillusion us by telling us of the slog it was up Yeates. Undaunted, we strode forth and were at the top of the dreaded Yeates 500 before we knew it.

It was only at the top of Yeates that we nearly abandoned our plans of going to Waiopahu. This was mainly due to a very attractive brunette and her brother who followed us up. They were on their way to Te Matawai and so were we after  $\frac{3}{4}$  hour debating until five minutes along the track our consciences were pricking us (after all Trevor might not have the curves but he might have laid awake worrying about his beloved? tramping companions had we not turned up.)

At the top of Richards Knob we caught sight of Trevor & Co. one top of the Twins and we joined them soon afterwards.

Sunday morning was very damp as Trevor & Co. left to try and go out a different route. Left with nothing to do all morning we decided on trying our cooking skills. As the magnificent stew was just ready to serve, we be dragged creatures crawled into the hut. Being the kind souls that we are we warmed up their poor frozen bodies with some of our stew.

The six of us left soon afterwards for home via the normal route. Party, Peter Darragh, Kathy Hindmarsh, Ross Meder.

20-21st SEPTEMBER ATIWHAKATU – ANGLE KNOB – HOLDSWORTH

A confused start saw the leader trotting home for his boots then driving to Ashhurst before realizing that the Pahiatua track wasn't there – early morning blues!

Drizzle and wind accompanied the party up the Atiwhakatu Stream. The mid hut was crowded with two bods so all walked on so they could lunch in the rain and wind. After a dawdle up to Angle Knob Hut and the eviction of four tongue-and-meats the intrepid leader discovered his sleeping-bag was, yet again, soaking wet. Wind, wind and wind puffed and puffed and almost blew the house down.

The weather on Sunday was no improvement so the party returned down the sidle track until a break in the clouds induced them to climb Jumbo for lunch in the snow. A gentle wander down to the cars, fish and chips, three scoop 12 cent ice creams and home to showers and bed.

Bill Freckington, Bill Mortenson, John Williams, Trevor Bissell, Kathy Hindmarsh, Elli Schlee, Viv Mawson.

5th OCTOBER MANGAHAO

To start a trip at 5.30 a.m. on a Sunday morning could only be described as F.E. (fantastically early?). Even so, six keen day-trippers (Brad Owen, Roy Wilson, John Haahman, John Williams, Ken Bradshaw and Short Tim) made the effort and were rewarded more than fully as the day progressed. Since it was murky on the very tops (and since one timid member, who shall remain nameless, came along for a river picnic anyway) we restricted our movements to the lower slopes at the headwaters of Baber Creek. The leatherwood also restricted our movements, except for Brad, that is, whose main restriction was in the form of leather shorts. He solved this problem by converting them into a mini-kilt and very dashing it was too.

When using Baber Creek to cross into Harris Creek, unless you count the number of side-streams you could end up on the ridge up to Ngapuketuru -- which is not readily too much of a hardship because the view is a splendid one and the route down into Harris Creek not too bad. Harris Creek satisfied all our requirements for a lunch spot, sun, water and scenery. Then, depending on how made you feel you can go rushing up and down the Mangahao or you can sunbathe and saunter back to the cars, trying out some of the pools for their depth. Whatever you prefer it is more than likely that you will feel exceedingly satisfied with another good day in the hills.

Enclosed is a list of name and address of club members, any omissions or alterations please inform the Secretary.
