3/ A LETTER TO THE EDITOR (If there were more trip reports, I wouldn't have to fill out this newsheet with anonymous letters – Hint)
Sir,

Re the report in your newsletter of November/December/January of a trip on 26 October last to the Holdsworth area of the Tararuas. I note with a great deal of concern that the party of 4, rather than remaining as such, split into two parties, each of 1 male and 1 female. Such groupings in the environment of sun-dappled glades, heady rich musky smells of decaying vegetation – the primal base of life's reproductive forces – must lead to a breakdown in the standards of propriety that we as a tramping club should wish to promote. If the fabric of society is not to be rent asunder, we must take a stand!

Yours, A concerned parent from the moral majority.

TRIP REPORTS:

14-15 March – Kiriwhakapapa Day Trip

Our large group of 13 enjoyed an easy tramp up an old tramline track to the Mikimiki road end and back. The track has been benched and well graded. In many places the tramline rails are still in evidence, along with the sleepers now well covered in mosses and lichens. The Mikimiki stream is particularly attractive with numerous small rocky gorges overhung by stately beech trees (red beech). The showers that passed over in the afternoon did not even penetrate the forest but provided an ideal walking atmosphere.

We were: Janet Baird, John Barkla, Bob Barrell, Monica Cantwell, Jenny Dymock, Ben Harding, Gayle Hogan, Anne Jaggard, Liz Morrison, Cathy Morton, Nico Middelkoop, Helen Perry, Pam Warnock.

7-8 March - Abort-a-Contorta

Those of you who didn't pullout Pinus contorta from the flanks of Ruapehu missed two days of fine sunny weather and a comfortable camp amongst the Pinus radiata with a scrumptious meal at night by candle-light. See you next year? Team of 87 was: Nanette and Peter Clough, Ben Harding Pat Janssen, Nico Middelkoop, Julie Plummer, Roger Redmayne, the Todds, Peter Wiles.

24-25 January Totara Flats

Arriving at the Mount Holdsworth Road end around 9.30 a.m., a party of four of us soon found out what the prevailing conditions of drizzle and occasional showers had done to the eastern side of the Tararuas, while Palmerston North bathed in sunshine. The tracks were wet, and where they were not muddy, they often resembled streams, complete with mini-rapids, meanders and occasional dammed up 'lakes'. Nevertheless, off we went up the Gentle Annie track, passing Rocky Lookout where we glimpsed a view of the mist-shrouded tops, and on to the track junction near Pig Flat, where one sign-post points optimistically Upwards -"Sky 1 Hour". After lunch at this spot we descended the track to Totara Creek, finding the stream rather high and coloured but not impassable. The same applied to the Waiohine about 2 hours later, which made the likelihood of fishing totally unrealistic, so after letting ourselves across the wire cage we headed onto Totara Lodge. Three hunters on leave from the army were already there, and they obligingly kept the fire well stoked all evening.

The following day dawned a good deal drier, which gave us rather better conditions for retracing our steps. No sign of deer, but the Totara Flats themselves had plenty of bird life, including the brightly-coloured, parrot-like eastern Rosellas. After some 5½ hours tramping and a very leisurely lunch, we emerged back at the road end around 4 p.m..

We were: Nanette and Peter Clough, Ursula Ramon, Amanda Smith.

14/15 February – Watery Vinegar Hill Trip

Eight people: - three in canoes fishing and paddling from Ohingaiti, four from Palmy, one from Ohakune. Two bodies lost party, but found us again from the opposite end of the Domain some time later.

Explored the very local area, met whacky Wangers (Wanganui Tramping Club trampers) and Rowdy Rangitikeis (Rangitiekei Tramping Club). Inspected various species of tents and grubs. Cooked grub, ate grub.

The three canoeist-fishermen arrived with no fish, wet bodies but no dunking – so they say.

Feasted on John's birthday cake: mandarin segments, cream and chocolate hearts (it was St Valentine's Day). Talked, went to bed. Awoke to light rain which got heavier leading to relentless downpour. Cup of tea in bed from early morning fisherman – no fish, more sleep. Then cooked breakfast in rain.

Packed up. Went home. Communal lunch at Terry's drying in front of warm fire.

Altogether – perhaps a longish way (45 minutes from P.N.) to go to get a lot of things, plus oneself, very wet in a short space of time – but still it was good to get out of the city to a nice place, relax and return home rather refreshed.

Team: Julian, Terry, Stewart (canoeists), John, Marilyn, Pip, Ron, Dorothy.

1st March - Search and Rescue, Tararuas

The police call came on a week-end when a surprisingly large group were away on a week-end trip to the Kaimanawas, but we nevertheless managed to raise a team of four to be taken to Eketahuna early on Sunday morning. A deerstalker had been overdue three days, and it was thought he was probably injured. As it happened, our team had little constructive to do on the search, but in such cases it is being there and available that counts.

We were taken by air force Iroquois to a knob on the northern flank of Ruapae, not far from the last sighting of the missing hunter. We set up the radio and reported our position, and were told of fresh developments and told to stand by. We were still there nearly two hours later when the helicopter found the missing hunter, but by then the mist had covered the tops. So it was a case of navigating through the cloud back to Herepai, and to a flattish bump under the cloud which served as airport for our return flight. But while we may have had little part in the successful outcome of the search, we all learnt a lot about such operations: like not relying on the search organisers to provide items like rope and first aid kit, or about tracing developments from grid references relayed on radio.

The reason for the search is also instructive, since the lone hunter had become separated from two companions, then spent 3 days without food, only hours from the road end, and not thinking any overdue alarm would be raised. The moral is, communicate intentions clearly with companions.

Team: Peter Clough, Damienne Eder, Linda Rowan, Peter Wiles.
